

COGNITIVE BEHAVIORAL THERAPY (CBT) – BOOSTER SESSION 2

New Case: Rohan (26 y/o) – Contamination OCD + Checking
Highly Detailed – Realistic Style

SESSION INFORMATION

Client:	Rohan (26 years, Male, Software Engineer, Bangalore)	Therapist:	Dr. A.
Session Type:	Booster Session 2 (3 months post-termination)	Focus:	Final Review & Long-Term Maintenance

PRE-SESSION THERAPIST NOTES

This is the second and final booster session, approximately 3 months after termination (6 weeks after Booster Session 1). Client has continued managing independently. He reported another period of moderate work stress but handled it well using his coping skills and Action Plan. He has been consistently reviewing his Action Plan and practicing exposures occasionally. Today's plan: Review progress since the last booster, check continued use of coping skills and Action Plan, address any remaining difficulties, provide final reinforcement of long-term maintenance strategies, and bring closure to the booster phase. Maintain supportive and encouraging approach.

SESSION START – CHECK-IN

Therapist: Good morning, Rohan. It's good to see you again for this final booster. How have you been since we last met?

Client: (speaking with steady confidence) I've been doing well. There was another stressful period at work about 3 weeks ago, but I handled it much better this time. I noticed the Early Warning Signs earlier (more washing and checking), used labeling and breathing right away, and reviewed my Action Plan. I also practiced one exposure from the hierarchy. The symptoms increased a bit but didn't spiral like they used to. I feel much more in control now.

Therapist: That's wonderful to hear. You caught it even earlier this time and responded more quickly. This shows real growth in your ability to self-manage. Can you tell me more about how this stressful period compared to the one before the last booster?

COMPARISON OF STRESSFUL PERIODS

Client: This time I noticed the increase in washing and checking within 2 days instead of 3–4 days. I started labeling immediately and practiced one exposure within the first week. I also reviewed my values — especially wanting to have more energy and not feel exhausted. It helped me stay motivated to keep using the tools. The symptoms still increased, but they stayed much more manageable. I didn't feel as scared or hopeless as before.

Therapist: That's a clear and meaningful improvement. You're recognizing signs earlier, responding faster, and using your values to stay motivated. This is exactly what long-term recovery and resilience look like. How does it feel to see this progress in yourself?

Client: It feels really good. I still get anxious sometimes, but I don't feel helpless anymore. I know what to do, and I trust that I can handle it.

REVIEW OF COPING SKILLS & ACTION PLAN USE

Therapist: It sounds like your Action Plan has become a natural part of how you respond. Which parts of the plan have been most useful for you in the last 6 weeks?

Client: Labeling is still the foundation — I use it almost automatically now. Reviewing my values when I feel overwhelmed has also been surprisingly helpful. It reminds me why I'm doing this work. I've also been practicing one exposure every 1–2 weeks even on good days, just to keep the skills active. I think that's made a difference.

Therapist: That proactive practice on good days is excellent maintenance behavior. It keeps the skills sharp so they're easier to access when you need them. Have there been any situations recently where you felt the urge to fall back into old patterns, or where the Action Plan felt harder to use?

Client: There were a couple of days when anxiety felt very strong and I really wanted to wash immediately. But I was able to wait at least 5–10 minutes using labeling and breathing. It didn't always feel easy, but it was manageable. I didn't go back to excessive washing like before.

FINAL REINFORCEMENT & LONG-TERM MAINTENANCE

Therapist: You've shown consistent progress across both booster sessions. You're recognizing signs earlier, responding more skillfully, and maintaining your gains even during stressful periods. As we bring this booster phase to a close, what feels most important for you to remember going forward?

Client: I think the most important things are: keep using labeling, don't wait too long to respond when I notice Early Warning Signs, keep practicing exposures occasionally even on good days, and remember my values when things feel hard. Also, I know I can reach out for a booster if I need to — that helps me feel less alone with this.

Therapist: Those are excellent guiding principles. You now have a clear, personalized system that works for you. OCD may still try to come back during stressful times, but you have the tools and the plan to manage it. You've done the hard work, and you should feel proud of how far you've come.

FINAL ENCOURAGEMENT & CLOSURE

Therapist: As we close this booster phase, is there anything else you want to say or ask?

Client: I just want to say thank you again. I came in feeling ashamed and exhausted, thinking I should be able to fix this myself. You helped me understand OCD better and gave me tools that actually work. I still have ups and downs, but I feel much more capable and less alone with it now.

Therapist: Thank you, Rohan. It has been a privilege to work with you through this process. You showed up consistently, practiced even when it was hard, and took ownership of your recovery. The progress you've made is because of your effort. I have complete confidence in your ability to continue managing this long-term. You can always reach out if you need support in the future.

Client: Thank you. I feel ready to keep going on my own now.

SESSION SUMMARY & FEEDBACK

Therapist: Today we reviewed how you've been managing since the last booster, including another stressful period where you responded even more effectively. You've shown clear growth in independence and skill. How are you feeling about today's session and closing the booster phase?

Client: I feel good. I'm proud of how I handled the last stressful period, and I feel more confident about continuing on my own. I know what to do and I have a plan. I'm ready.

Therapist: That's wonderful. Any final questions before we finish?

Client: Not really. Thank you again for everything.

POST-SESSION THERAPIST NOTES

- Client demonstrated continued strong independent management and further improvement in early recognition and response to Early Warning Signs.
- Successfully handled another stressful period with faster, more skillful use of coping skills and Action Plan.
- Consistent proactive maintenance behavior noted (regular Action Plan review + occasional exposure practice on good days).
- Client expressed clear confidence in long-term self-management and realistic understanding of ongoing recovery.
- Booster phase successfully completed. Client has a clear, personalized maintenance plan and knows he can reach out for future support if needed.

Disclaimer: This is a completely fictional but realistic simulation created solely for educational and AI training purposes. It does not represent any real person or therapy.